Inspiration:

Nature builds in layers, each layer depicting a time in the evolution. It allows the material to tell their story unhindered. Humans however build in a rectilinear-cuboidal, easy to piece together style, often forgetting the nature of the material used, more industrial, efficient, less emotional about the being of the material. The Scoops and Striations is the visual story of how nature would re-shape the cuboidal world when we leave this planet.

The weathering would re-expose the layers, erode the surface smoothly on some faces as a pebble on a river bank, while scooping some dead woods on others leaving behind a gouged void. A spherical void in a once cuboidal world! It also brings out the materials, Indo Wud in a new light, not as a plane surface, but as a solid material to shape and play, using it as a stack and allowing the edge to also add to the aesthetics, allowing it to expose its inner self confidently. The top surface is the textured, satin gloss finish which brings out the versatility of the paint. The paint world is the mask we all add to present a certain image to the world, here a basic material is shown in its honest form with a transparent finish on the lower part and a more glamorous finish on the top surface.
